Introduction

The pursuit of international peace, security and sustainable development is the overarching goal of Irish foreign policy. It is the fundamental guiding principle that underpins Ireland's interactions with the wider world. This goal is not achievable without the empowered participation of women.

The Women, Peace and Security (WPS) agenda recognises both the particularly adverse effect of conflict on women and girls, as well as their critical role in conflict prevention, peace negotiations, peacebuilding, and governance. Equitable, durable and sustainable peace and reconciliation cannot be built without women at the table.

The first Women, Peace and Security resolution, United Nations Security Council Resolution (UNSCR) 1325, was adopted in 2000, and marked a watershed moment when the international community recognised the particular impact of conflict on women and girls. The tenth anniversary of its adoption, however, brought increased international attention to the weak implementation of this binding resolution. UNSCR 1325 is bolstered by six subsequent resolutions: 1820 (2008), 1888 (2009), 1889 (2009), 1960 (2010), 2106 (2013) and 2122 (2013), each bringing focus on particular aspects of the agenda such as sexual violence in conflict, impunity, and women's participation in decision making.

The Irish approach to the Women, Peace and Security agenda is unique, with multiple perspectives brought together through cross Government collaboration and co-operation. First, the Irish Defence Forces and An Garda Síochána are active participants in UN and UN-mandated overseas peace operations. This experience provides a solid foundation from which to begin to address international security issues. Secondly, Ireland's overseas development aid programme, Irish Aid, is a world-leading programme. Ireland's policy for international development *One World, One Future*¹ identifies gender inequality and gender-based violence (GBV) as priorities to address. Lastly, Ireland has direct domestic experience of conflict and post-conflict reconciliation. The people of Ireland have experienced the effects of the Northern Ireland conflict and successive governments have been actively engaged in political, peace and reconciliation processes to resolve the Northern Ireland conflict. Furthermore, Ireland is a country of increasingly rich diversity, and a growing number of women are arriving here from conflict areas, both as asylum seekers as well as via the Government's Refugee Resettlement Programme. The case for Ireland's robust engagement with the Women, Peace and Security agenda is clear.

Ireland's first National Action Plan on UNSCR 1325 addressed these elements and more.² In 2010, Ireland conducted a cross-learning initiative involving participants from Ireland, Northern Ireland, Liberia and Timor Leste.³ This initiative fed into the drafting of Ireland's first National Action Plan (NAP) on UNSCR 1325 for the years 2011-2014. A Consultative Group led by an independent Chair was closely involved in the development of this first NAP.⁴ It contained actions under five pillars relating to, inter alia, Ireland's overseas development aid programme, our peacekeeping deployments, and our contributions to post-conflict reconciliation on the island of Ireland. Actions also address the needs and human rights of women on the island of Ireland who have been affected by conflict. The Plan was monitored independently by a Monitoring Group (MG), which produced a comprehensive Mid-Term Progress Report⁵ highlighting a number of successes, gaps and challenges in implementation.⁶

2015 is a significant year. It marks 15 years since the adoption of the first Women, Peace and Security resolution. It marks 20 years since the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action. The United Nations Security Council has mandated the United Nations Secretary General to produce a report on the implementation of UNSCR 1325, and a global study reflecting the current state of play is underway. These developments are complementary to a broad gender equality policy agenda which includes the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW). Ireland's second National Action Plan will benefit from the medium-term, strategic perspective set out in this review process. Most significantly, the National Action Plan will focus on where Ireland can be most effective and achieve maximum impact with its resources.

Strategic Aims

Ireland will deliver on its commitment to implement the Women, Peace and Security agenda through a robust, whole-of-government National Action Plan. This Plan will advance, among policy-makers and stake-holders, a comprehensive understanding of the complex and inter-related issues involved in implementation.

Ireland's National Action Plan aims to:

Strengthen women's leadership and participation in decision-making in conflict and post-conflict situations

Ensure that a gender perspective is incorporated into Ireland's engagement in overseas humanitarian and development aid, peace-keeping, governance, post-conflict activities and interventions

Bolster Ireland's ongoing work on protection from and prevention of gender-based violence

Leverage Ireland's participation in global and regional fora to champion the implementation of the Women, Peace and Security resolutions

Methodology

Ireland's second National Action Plan was drafted in line with the following processes:

» A Consultative Group to input into the consultation process

A Consultative Group (CG) comprising an equal and balanced representation from statutory bodies, civil society and academic experts with relevant experience of conflict or post-conflict situations, the Women, Peace and Security policy agenda and experience of the development of National Action Plans on UNSCR 1325 was established. Nominations were sought from the Monitoring Group of the first National Action Plan and members were appointed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs and Trade. The group's role was to advise and inform the development of the second National Action Plan. The group was chaired independently while the Conflict Resolution Unit (CRU) provided a Secretariat.⁷

» An open, transparent and public consultation

A Consultation Document was prepared by the Consultative Group and was published on the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade's (DFAT) website, inviting written submissions from relevant stakeholders on how Ireland could renew the National Action Plan. In all, 37 written submissions were received from stakeholders and these are available online.⁸

The Consultative Group also organised a consultative workshop in Iveagh House, Dublin, which featured an expert panel discussion and roundtable discussions on the themes of empowerment, prevention, protection and relief, monitoring and accountability, and international developments. This workshop provided an opportunity for participants to listen to the voices of policy experts and women affected by conflict, as well as network and share experiences. Details of attendees and reports of the themes discussed are also available online.⁹

» Assessing monitoring and evaluation process

A relevant and effective National Action Plan is a living document and it is vital that actions can be amended and updated as the operating environment changes. The recommendation of the Monitoring Group's Mid-Term Progress Report on Ireland's first NAP for fewer and broader commitments in Ireland's second NAP was a guiding principle in the drafting of this document. The robust monitoring mechanism established in the first NAP is bolstered in this successive document, and the role of independent reviewers is maintained as a significant factor in monitoring implementation.

» Using meaningful indicators

It is important that indicators are specific and measurable but it is also important that they focus on information that is meaningful and relevant. Furthermore, it is important that baselines are established in order to track progress. Indicators are both quantitative (numerical) and qualitative (categorical) and measure progress against both output (activities) and outcome (the impact of those activities).

Pillars and Measures

The measures that the Government of Ireland commits to taking in this National Action Plan are centred around four Pillars:

Prevention

Empowerment and Participation

Protection, Relief and Recovery

Promotion

“The Government is committed to ensuring that Ireland continues to play its role, both nationally and internationally, in furthering the cause of gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls. It is only through a collective effort that we can pave a way for girls to enjoy the full expressions of their rights, fulfil their potential and contribute to and benefit from discrimination-free societies.”

Seán Sherlock T.D., Minister of State for Development,
Trade Promotion and North-South Co-operation.

Pillar 1:

Prevention

Prevention of Conflict, Including Gender-Based Violence (GBV) and Sexual Exploitation and Abuse (SEA)

The prevention of conflict, including conflict-related gender-based violence and sexual exploitation and abuse is extremely complex. Ireland's initial work under this pillar of the Women, Peace and Security agenda focused successfully on the provision of comprehensive training to personnel deployed overseas, and capacity-building of partners and civil society organisations (CSOs) in conflict affected countries and contexts. The Government of Ireland will continue to strengthen these efforts. In addition, the Government of Ireland believes that achieving sustainable peace is much more complex than the simple absence of conflict. A rules-based international system, founded on international law and the peaceful resolution of disputes, represents the only solid foundation for global peace and security. With this in mind, Ireland will continue to advocate for open, representative, transparent and effective international organisations and institutions as a driver of stability.

The Government of Ireland commits to:

- a) Continue the implementation of effective training policies on the prevention of sexual exploitation and abuse, human rights, gender equality, and international humanitarian law for all relevant Irish staff deployed overseas
- b) Address the issue of impunity for conflict-related sexual violence in national and international legal systems
- c) Contribute in a strategic manner to the promotion of peace, stability and security
- d) Work to prevent and respond to sexual and gender-based violence in situations of fragility

Pillar 2:

Empowerment and Participation

Participation and Representation of Women in Decision Making

The active participation of women in decision-making, including leadership roles, is perhaps the most crucial pillar in the successful implementation of the Women, Peace and Security agenda. It is the focus of UN Security Council Resolution 2122 of October 2013¹⁰. Ireland's policy for international development, One World, One Future, recognises the cross-cutting importance of the empowerment of women, economically, politically and socially in order to build peaceful, resilient and stable societies. It is important also that efforts are made to include women as full and equal participants in conflict prevention, protection and peacebuilding activities in post-conflict situations. The national ownership of processes to promote the empowerment of women and increased gender equality is key to their success, both in situations of fragility and in post-conflict contexts, in Ireland, Northern Ireland and overseas. The Government of Ireland is fully committed to ensuring to the fullest the valuable contribution of women to national and international peace and security.

The Government of Ireland commits to:

- a) Implement the commitments relating to the empowerment of women in Ireland's policy for international development, One World, One Future relating to fragile and humanitarian contexts
- b) When working with private sector entities and in promoting Irish interests, seek to promote synergies between this work and the empowerment of women in conflict and post-conflict situations
- c) Support the empowerment and participation in decision-making of women on the island of Ireland, including those affected by conflict
- d) Increase the participation of women at senior decision making and leadership levels in Irish defence, police and foreign services
- e) Incorporate the Women, Peace and Security agenda as a key theme of engagement with situations of fragility
- f) Support and promote women peace-builders and a gender perspective in peace-building
- g) Support engagement of men in advancing gender equality and other initiatives which promote the principles of Women, Peace and Security

Pillar 3:

Protection, Relief and Recovery

Protection From Gender-Based Violence (GBV) and Sexual Exploitation and Abuse (SEA) and Other Violations of Women's Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law, and Relief, Recovery, and Rehabilitation

The protection of women and girls from gender-based violence and sexual exploitation and abuse in crisis and conflict situations was identified as a major strength of Ireland's first National Action Plan on Women, Peace and Security by an independent Mid Term Progress Report. Significant achievements have been made, including the incorporation of a range of policies and mechanisms in respect of gender and sexual exploitation into the Defence Forces, An Garda Síochána and Rapid Response Corps. The Government of Ireland recognises the need to be vigilant and proactive in continuing to prevent and respond to such crimes, particularly in emergency situations. Ireland is also committed to increasing coherence in its activities in the area of the relief, recovery and rehabilitation of women affected by conflict on the island of Ireland, including women who have migrated to Ireland from conflict affected areas.

The Government of Ireland commits to:

- a) Work to eliminate the scourge of sexual violence in conflict
- b) Work to protect women and girls in humanitarian crises, including those crises as a result of conflict
- c) Support the relief, recovery and rehabilitation of women on the island of Ireland affected by conflict

Pillar 4:

Promotion

Promotion of Women, Peace and Security agenda in International, Regional and National Arenas

The inclusion of a pillar devoted to the promotion of the Women, Peace and Security agenda in international, regional and national arenas was an innovation in Ireland's first National Action Plan. Despite being a small state with modest resources, this has proven to be a valuable area of activity where Ireland is well-positioned to maximise the impact of its engagement. The UN Security Council has recognised that "without a significant implementation shift, women and women's perspectives will continue to be underrepresented in conflict resolution, peace building and protection in the foreseeable future."¹¹ Ireland intends to redouble its efforts in the promotion of the Women, Peace and Security agenda, with the intention of increasing momentum towards this implementation shift and of mainstreaming the principles of Women, Peace and Security. Ireland will also step up efforts to promote the Women, Peace and Security agenda in regional and national fora.

The Government of Ireland commits to:

- a) Support the inclusion of the Women, Peace and Security agenda where relevant in human rights mechanisms
- b) Leverage Ireland's role in regional and international organisations to gain visibility for and increase implementation of the Women, Peace and Security agenda
- c) Increase lesson-sharing of Irish experience of Women, Peace and Security
- d) Build public awareness of Ireland's commitment to the Women, Peace and Security agenda

Monitoring and Evaluation

This National Action Plan is at its core a living document, intended to be updated, improved and reflected upon throughout its implementation as context dictates in order to ensure that actions taken are meaningful and constructive.

A Monitoring Group which have the spirit and ambition of the Women, Peace and Security agenda as a guiding principle, will be formed to oversee the regular and systematic review of progress on achieving stated objectives, actions and targets across all pillars as set out in the Plan, including the publication of independent progress reports two years after its adoption and again at the end of the term of the Plan. It will also be a dynamic and engaged forum for the discussion of implementation of the National Action Plan and other issues relating to Irish engagement with the Women, Peace and Security agenda.

The Monitoring Group will consist of representatives from the relevant statutory bodies, and will also include at least 50% representation from civil society and academia with demonstrable relevant experience and expertise. The Monitoring Group will meet four times a year and will be independently chaired. A secretariat and technical support will be provided by the Conflict Resolution Unit. Capacity building of the Monitoring Group will also be supported by the Conflict Resolution Unit, in cooperation with Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade's Evaluation and Audit Unit.

The Monitoring Group will also:

- » Revise existing objectives, actions and targets in light of emerging issues and policy agendas in Women, Peace and Security, and in response to lessons learned and challenges identified in the monitoring process
- » Work with the appropriate Oireachtas committees to ensure involvement by parliamentarians in the monitoring of National Action Plan implementation
- » Develop and use outreach and communications mechanisms to ensure regular dissemination of updates to wider communities of stakeholders and make sure, in particular, that the perspectives of women affected by conflict are incorporated into the ongoing work of the Monitoring Group

The Government of Ireland commits to:

- a) Fully support the effective monitoring and evaluation of the commitments of the National Action Plan by the Monitoring Group
